The old idea that a minister should occupy a place apart from his charge has in large measure given way to the sentiment of a "practical age" and the so-called institutional church of the cities is but one manifestation of this idea. In the city the method by which a minister may come most closely to his people is a complicated matter, for the people under his spiritual guidance are of many occupations and many activities. In the country the question is a more direct one. Here the congregation is of one mind, of one line of thought.

The steerable balloon, made by Thomas S. Baldwin under contract for the signal corps of the army, has been accepted, and is now the property of the government. Mr. Baldwin agreed to make a balloon that could be propelled at the rate of twenty miles an hour, could stay in the air two hours, and carry two men and fuel enough for a four-hour trip. He kept his agreement, and now the signal corps owns its first balloon that is independent of the ordinary air currents, and will return to the starting point if no accident happens. Conditional contracts have been made for three heavier than air flying machines, and when this was written the inventors of them were making experimental flights to get the machines in shape before submitting to official tests.

For the number of graduates it turns out the electoral college probably is the most expensive one in the world.
